

POLITICO Europe Comment Policy:

Disclaimer at top of comment section on each article —

Comments are subject to moderation by POLITICO staff. While we want to hear your input and provide a forum to discuss the content of our stories, comments that contain personal attacks, hate speech, or profanity will not be tolerated. We will also not approve all comments that are off-topic or add nothing to the discussion. See POLITICO's full comment policy here (LINK).

If we turn off comments for an article (which we've done a few times with editor permission, but don't have a policy for yet) —

Comments for this article have been turned off. Due to comment volume, and so we can better moderate comments to foster productive discussions, we do not enable comments on all articles. See POLITICO's full comment policy here (LINK).

Full Comment Policy (on separate web page) —

Comments are subject to moderation by POLITICO staff. While we want to hear your input and provide a forum to discuss the content of our stories, comments that contain personal attacks, hate speech, or profanity will not be tolerated. We will also not approve all comments that add nothing to the discussion. Please keep content relevant to the articles — if comments are too far off-topic they may not be approved.

We recognize that there will be disagreement with or criticism of articles published on our site, but will not allow mindless personal attacks against our journalists or against POLITICO.

We will remove any posts that are explicitly commercial or spam-like.

Due to comment volume, and so we can better moderate comments to foster productive discussions, we do not enable comments on all articles.